Case Scenarios

Two professing believers are partners in a business which fails. One partner bears primary responsibility for the failure due to a very bad decision made unilaterally. How should they handle each of the following possible situations and how can the church help?

- 1) How should they treat each other? How should they handle bankruptcy proceedings?
- 2) The partner damaged by the other partner’s decision threatens to sue for damages. How would you counsel each partner

A believer is seriously injured at the home of another believer. The medical coverage of the homeowners insurance is quickly exhausted, but the liability portion of the insurance coverage cannot be applied unless a lawsuit is filed. What options would the believer have in being able to gain financial coverage of medical bills?

A married couple in which each spouse claims to be a Christian reaches a level of conflict that results in a physical separation between them and they cannot agree on the living arrangements for the children or basic care for them (schooling, medical care, visitation, financial provision). What options are available to each of them and to the church in each of the following possible consequences?

- 1) One spouse wants to stay separated and the other wants to reconcile
- 2) One spouse files for legal separation in order to gain custody of the children
- 3) One spouse files for legal separation in order to gain financial support and split assets
- 4) One spouse files for divorce in order to gain custody, financial support and split assets
